On the Atlantic the long spasm continued during the night. The crippled collier H. F. De Bardeleben, her crew fled in the nick of time, sank 800 miles off Boston. The freighter Harburg, off New Scotland, waited for help and the tug, tugboat Franklin, sailing the waves toward the scene, lost her steering gear.

Five coast guardsmen on the patrol craft "218" were missing with their boat off Delaware cape. Twelve vessels sought them. On Lake Erie a government dredge, with 40 men, was gripped in ice; a fish tug was saved after a fight through snow swept floes, and fish nets worth thousands were endangered.

New York City was colder yesterday than any day this season, the mercury dropping to 13 above. One man was frozen to death there, and western New York's second blizzard of March claimed the life of a Buffalo merchant.

PRINCE RENOUNCES THRONE IN WEDDING

Prince and his mother on the eve of the ceremony.

"Marriage is too solemn an event to be undertaken in such undignified surroundings," the grand duchess said today. "The should have gone to a church, any church but so it was a church."

Not Without Precedent

Prince Lennart is not the first royal-born to renounce his princely prerogatives and title in order to marry one of the plebeian rank, but, as usual, there is a great deal of ado for the old tyranny of marriages is still the invisible enemy of the surviving royalties in Europe, marriages are still supposed to be arranged for reasons of state.

In other words royalty should marry royalty. As plain Mr. and Mrs. Bernadotte the couple should get on pretty well, both socially and financially. Lennart's personal fortune being estimated at $1,000,000.

Prince Lennart seems to be following in the footsteps of Prince Oscar Bernadotte, who renounced his royal rank to marry one of his mother's ladies-in-waiting, some forty years ago. His marriage to Miss Ebba Munck, an untitled woman, did not meet with royal approval, however. Perhaps this was due to the fact that Miss Munck was of an old and aristocratic family and of higher position than Karin.

This marriage is considered one of the happiest in the history of Sweden.

Seeking Happiness

Prince Lennart recently said: "What is the good of being a prince in these days? I am going to be happy."

The young prince first met his bride-to-be, daughter of a Stockholm public accountant, in 1925 when both were attending school in the Swedish capital.

"She was a little girl in pigtail, just 13," Prince Lennart recalled, when reporters pressed him for details of the romance. "I didn't like her at first, but later I saw her in a different light, and in 1927 I determined that I would marry her. We have had so many heart aches. It seemed like this moment would never come. But I made my decision. My grandfather made his, and since we cannot marry in Sweden without his consent we came here."

Will Issue Bulletins Instead of Answering Press Questions

HOPKINSVILLE, N. J., March 11.—Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of New Jersey state police, announced today the police would discontinue replying to questions on the Lindbergh kidnapping case and instead would issue bulletins twice daily—at 11 a. m. and 10 p. m.

Answering the questionnaires, Col. Schwarzkopf said, "has taken a great deal of our time which really belongs to the advancement of the work," and his formal statement expressed "regret the attempt that has been made to dictate to the police."

Assurances were given "that the moment anything definite develops, we will issue a bulletin immediately so that you may have prompt and authoritative information."

How It Came About

Col. Schwarzkopf's action was precipitated by the questionnaire submitted shortly after midnight yesterday. Several of the questions asked upon the police to explain discrepancies in answers noted in previous questionnaires. Some of the questions, by inference, challenged the police action.

One question asked what steps the police took to obtain bloodhounds to follow the trail of the kidnapers. Police previously had explained that "none was available."

This morning's question, however, stated dog authorities had said "100 or more good bloodhounds could have been made available at Hopewell within two hours after the kidnapping was reported."

Another question included the statement that reporters had found "some homes" within a fairly short walking distance of the Lindbergh "cave" had not been visited by police, and inquired why not. The purpose of the question, it was explained, was to determine if "a thorough, humanitarian effort has been made to discover whether the baby might have been abandoned in the vicinity of the Lindbergh home."

No Answer To This One

One question included among the 14 which the police declined to answer was:

"Will you please give us a definite answer as to whether Col. Lindbergh has communicated with the kidnapers by newspaper advertisement, letter, telephone, or by other means, or whether he has received any message . . . which he believes to have come from the kidnapers? If the answer to this is the usual 'no answer,' will you kindly explain why the question is not answered?"

Discontinuance of the questionnaire leaves the press without any official source of information except the twice-a-day bulletins which Col. Schwarzkopf's statement promised. At the outset Col. Lindbergh announced that all official information concerning the progress of the search would have to come from state police headquarters.

Numerous "Leads" Develop

The nine days of investigation have been filled with hundreds of leads that have sent investigators scurrying to Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, and other states. So far as is known, however, the vital facts remain summarized in—"The baby has not been found."

Two men with gang influence—Spitalo and Bittz—whom Col. Lindbergh authorized last week to act as his agents in dealing with the kidnapers (should they hesitate to deal with him directly) were called into federal court in Brooklyn today to answer a charge of prohibition law violation.

Spitalo and Bittz appeared in federal court yesterday, under the names of James Martin and Morris Grossman. They denied their identity, but Grossman and Bittz' fingerprints were found to be identical, and newspapermen were positive in their identification of Spitalo.

A gangster volunteer in the baby search—the notorious Chicago jail pleaded from his Chicago jail cell for release under bond so he might exert his admittedly extensive underworld influence toward effecting return of the child to his parents.

A fourth figure with a gangland background—Morris Rosner—has been called to the Lindbergh home during the past few days, according to Edward P. Mulconey, commissioner of New York police.

It was Rosner, according to some, who caused Spitalo and Bittz to be named as possible go-betweens.

At Capone Confident

In his cell in the Cook county jail in Chicago, Al Capone, under an 11-year federal prison sentence for income tax law violation, was "pretty sure" he could get the Lindbergh baby back to his parents if he were released on bond.

He proposed that he be released on bond. "I'll post as much bond as the government asks, $200,000 if need be," so that he may have a chance to see what he can do.

Capone disclaimed any theories about the kidnapping other than a belief that "some mob did it." His plan, if given temporary freedom, would be to "get in touch with a lot of people I know."

"If it wasn't a mob, the kidnapers would have been caught by now," the gang chief said. "Only a mob could get away with it. That's why I could help a lot—I know a lot of people."

When George E. G. Johnson, federal attorney in Chicago, was asked what he thought of freeing Capone temporarily to give him a chance to help on the Lindbergh case, he said:

"I know of no formal move now afoot to free Capone on bond. I don't want to say what my reaction would be to such a move until it is made."

The New Jersey police declined to comment on the Capone offer. Henry Johnson, sailor friend of Betty Gow, nursemaid of the Lindbergh baby, was revealed today to have been placed formally under arrest March 6. The charge is violation of the immigration laws. The state police said they had not entirely eliminated Miss Gow from consideration. She is at the Lindbergh home.

Col. Schwarzkopf said "no definite responsibility" had been fixed upon Johnson in connection with the kidnapping.

The director's temperate today was 102, and his pulse was 100. The doctors reported.

For the last two weeks Miss Gow had been showing improvement and it was believed that he had passed the most dangerous point in his illness. He has not been permitted to have visitors since he was stricken.

Success has attended experiments in England with the production of steam by burning a mixture of gas and air injected at high speed into the water in boilers.

CHANGE SETTING OF KIDNAP SCENE

Mother on Same Floor as Nursery at Time of Kidnaping, Is Report.

The crib empty and rushed down to the parents with the announcement of the kidnapping.

But it was authoritatively determined today that the clock of the night the Lindbergh baby was in a bath on the second floor, where the nursery is situated, preparing to take a bath.

Miss Gow Had Been Away

When Miss Gow, who had only been called to the Lindbergh estate that afternoon despite previous announcements that she spent the week-end with the baby, found the crib empty, she went to the bathroom and asked if Mrs. Lindbergh had the child there with her.

The mother said she did not have the baby but even then no feeling of consternation was experienced by the two women, though Mrs. Lindbergh did immediately begin to dress.

"I guess the colonel must have taken him downstairs," Miss Gow is reported to have said, in effect, and she went down to ask the father.

By that time Mrs. Lindbergh was in the nursery and Colonel Lindbergh joined her there. After a hasty search of house and grounds, the police were notified and the hunt began which was still in full swing today without any palpable results.

Stories Miskelung

It has been repeatedly stated that Miss Gow did not leave the house on the day of the kidnapping or during the previous week-end. This was literally true, but it was also misleading. Miss Gow did not leave the Lindbergh home during that period for the very simple reason that she was not there.

The Lindberghs had been accustomed to leave Miss Gow at the Morrow home in Englewood when they made their week-end trips to their estate here, and they followed this custom on this occasion.

On Tuesday, however, they decided to remain here instead of going to Englewood as they had planned, because of the baby's cold.

And so they telephoned to the Morrow home and had Miss Gow come out. She arrived late in the afternoon.

Colonel Lindbergh got home at 8:30, half an hour after the baby had been put to bed, and he and Mrs. Lindbergh at once had dinner. After dinner they sat in the living room for a little while, and then Col. Lindbergh moved to his desk in the basement.

And Mrs. Lindbergh went upstairs and took a bath before going to bed.

Henry (Red) Johnson, Miss Gow's sailor friend, had a "date" with her for that evening in Englewood, and when he appeared to keep that engagement he learned the nurse had been called to town.

He telephoned to her about 9 o'clock to express his regret that they could not have their evening together.

First Meeting in Maine

Johnson, who formerly worked on the Lamont yacht, met Miss Gow at the Morrow summer home in Maine, where she took care of the baby while the parents were flying to the Orient and back. He moved to Englewood later, presumably to be near the girl with whom his brother had said he was deeply in love.

He had made three visits to the Hopewell estate with Miss Gow or to visit her there. He has been questioned at length concerning the kidnapping case and is at present held in Newark on a warrant charging illegal entry to America.

PLEA MADE TO OHIO
COAL MINE STRIKERS

CADIZ, O., March 11.—Hope for prosperity and higher wages in Ohio's coal mining industry was held out to operators and striking miners today in an appeal by the Burn Ohio Coal association for an "armistice" to the present strike.

Judge George Canale, president of the association, told the miners and operators that great things are expected from his efforts to bring about the consummation of Ohio coal work in Ohio itself.

He pointed out that Ohio has 70,000,000 tons of coal annually. But that 50,000,000 of this comes from outside the state.

Lower type windows, which have been invented to admit light and air to rooms while excluding sunshine, have the advantage that they do not collect dust or rubbish dropped from higher windows.

CHICAGO, March 11—Everybody in Chicago is busy, but all find time to ask, knowing that good news from New York "What news is there of the Lindbergh child?"

The "Century of Progress" exposition in Chicago which you must not miss, will open on time in June, 1933. Every city, big and little, should pay the expenses of its mayor to the exposition and back, and make him promise to examine the wonderful architectural development of the lake front. That lake front has an especially valuable lesson for proud New York, with its endless miles of hideous, grimy waterfront to which poor mothers and their children have no access.

IF IT IS YOUR DESIRE to hoard keep out of Chicago's stores. For instance, an energetic young woman on her way to a ranch in the West spent two hours in Chicago today while waiting for her train.

She went to Mr. James Simpson's store, every merchant knows which one that is, "to buy two old-fashioned Canton flannel nightgowns, with long sleeves and high necks for use on the windy ranch. She bought them, but before she got to the nightgown place, on the fifth floor, she had bought three bracelets and one necklace.

She was about to buy a dress in addition to the nightgowns, an extremely pretty dress of pale pink satin, with daintily embroidered rosebuds in front and no sleeves. Fortunately it turned out to be a nightgown.

BLOCKING HER WAY to the elevator was the shoe department with particularly fine "pumps" of black suede with low heels. Some of those were bought.

Then came the door and the automobile, revolving round and round the block because it could not park.

But before the door came the watch counter, in charge of Mr. Sunshine, who smiles in a fashion worthy of his name.

He sold three watches to the lady who wanted only two Canton flannel nightgowns.

One was a dainty wrist watch with little diamonds on it, one was a rugged wrist watch for a young man, the third was a big watch that you could put under your pillow, guaranteed to keep absolutely perfect time.

The moral is that much depends on salesmanship and display of goods.

THE NEXT STOP on this trip will be Detroit, where everybody is making, thinking, talking and planning automobiles. These news items come from there.

Mr. Abbott of the Hudson company informs you that you will be met with a car built by William J. McAnaney especially to accommodate a dictating machine to be used while motoring. Mr. McAnaney, president of the Hudson company, who had seen this writer's homemade arrangement for an automobile phonograph, built a special body with a dictating machine that fits into the cushions of the back seat, and comes down like the arm that is lowered to divide the rear seat in some cars.

Progress never ceases.

THE DETROIT TIMES news department sends this on the telephone: "Walter Chrysler, rambling along at 60 miles an hour from Detroit to Dearborn a little before 11 o'clock this morning, taking with him two engineers, was on his way to show to Henry Ford his new Plymouth, to appear about the first of April."

Henry Ford, in Chrysler's opinion, is to automobiles what Mohammed is to Mohammedanism. And Chrysler drives out with his engineers to Dearborn to show his new car to Ford and ask: "What do you think of it?" As a devout Arab might journey down to Mecca to look at the Kaaba stone, from which Mohammed mounted to heaven, and get some inspiration there.

Mr. Chrysler had already told this writer, at Ziegfeld's first night, "When you see my new Plymouth you will see something."

You will see something when you see any first-class American car. The thing is to buy it, own it, use it, and feel prosperous.

Prisoner Freed
Says Prayers
Before Leaving

The grim walls of the city prison, looking down on streets and unusual sights as the endless procession of underlings comes and goes, saw for perhaps the first time yesterday a man kneeling at the side of his plank bunk in prayer.

When told by Police Chief W. E. Marks yesterday afternoon that he was about to be released, Woody Hockaday of Wichita, Kan., arrested Tuesday night for safe keeping, told the chief he would be ready as soon as he said his prayers. The chief withdrew with instructions that he was to rap on the prison door when he had finished. Unmindful of the curious gaze of his fellow prisoners Hockaday finished his prayers and then rapped on the door.

Refusing money offered him by wire by friends at Wichita, Hockaday started out on foot for Pittsburgh, Pa., carrying two traveling bags and a sleeping bag. "I came into this town broke, and I am leaving it broke," was his only explanation for refusing the money.

Hockaday told the police he was working on a plan of organizing growers with the object of receiving $125 for their wheat. He had a large quantity of wheat growing literature when arrested. It was all returned to him when he was released yesterday.

Good Brain Most Important Need of Age, Doctor Believes

PARIS—A good brain above everything else, is the need of this difficult age, according to Dr. Alex. Carrel, chief of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.

"The human brain is a most marvelous thing," writes Dr. Carrel in "Le Matin." "Everyone knows that our destiny depends entirely on its constitution. In the same way, the fate of a country depends on the quality of the cerebral material of its inhabitants. To the life of the nervous substance is linked the most powerful form of energy which exists, spiritual energy."

The human brain, according to this savant, contains about 12,000,000 cells. These cells do not form a simple mass but are organized into a harmonious system by extremely fine fibers which associate them with one another, keep them in communication with the rest of the body and the outside world, and permit them to control the organs and muscles.

The human brain is the most complex system which exists in our universe. But the quality of our thinking does not come solely from the constitution of the brain. It is also under the influence of the other organs, as well as microbes and chemical substances which come from the outside world. The brain of the greatest genius is bound to suffer from the effects of even a small amount of alcohol. "Modern man has no need of muscles," concludes Dr. Carrel, except in the measure which they are needed in the formation of a strong and harmonious body. It is imperative that we recognize the leadership of the brain, for nothing can replace its spiritual sources."

commission does not apply to national banks. The deposits will be listed at the probable per cent. the institution will pay its depositors. This per cent. will be determined by the liquidating agent and the state tax commission.

Approximately 140 persons have paid taxes on their deposits in the Citizens Building & Loan Co. These taxes will be refunded beginning March 20, the auditor said. Persons who have paid on such deposits are urged to call at the treasurer's office for a refund after March 20.

The question of taxing deposits of closed building and loan companies was raised before the tax commission by Auditor Thomas.

The auditor previously announced, on advice of the tax commission, that such deposits should be listed by the depositors as credits or claims. This first announcement affected institutions which had closed before Nov. 24, the listing day for banks and building and loan companies. The new ruling of the commission places responsibility for listing deposits on either bank officials or liquidating agents.

was really happy as she went to their room. Her fear an accident had detained Gar had completely vanished.

She was asleep when Gar came in, late. He sat down on the edge of the bed and slipped his arms about her, kissing her eyes to waken her.

"Kit, I was a beast to leave you alone so long. I didn't stay away because I was sore. Kit, Red's car broke down and the four of us had to go out in mine. Kit, were you awfully lonely? I missed you hor-ribly, sweetheart."

His nearness, the tenderness of his ardor enveloped her. She snug-gled closer into his arms.
"Kit, Red's been taking up a proposition to me. There's an automobile agency going to open—that new Swallow car I pointed out to you the other day. Red thinks I could get it."

"Things were dead for me without you, Kit. . . Everything all right, now, sweet?"
She put her head in the hollow of his arm, with a little breath of contentment.

"Everything."
During the days that followed Kitty thought often of David Frew.
She had not told Gar of his coming to the house because she remembered that David had spoken of it as a conspiracy between Pound and himself. She pictured its workings.
Pound telephoning to David when he knew that Mrs. Frew and Carol and Gar all were going to be out.

"Don't you ever see David, Gar?" she asked, once.
"Not any oftener than I can help."
"What does he do?"
"Not much. Thinks he can write, but I guess nobody agrees with him."

"Where does he live?"
"I'll drive you past his apartment some day and then you'll see what I mean when I say he's a wash-out.
But why all this interest in David?"
"He's your half-brother, Gar."

"Well, that's nothing to me, or to you, Kit."
She dropped the subject of David.
But her friendliness toward him stood against Gar's scorn.

David had been kinder to her than he knew. He had done more than help her through a lonely evening; he had given her a new attitude toward Gar. That had been it, something of his mother's indulgence did not occur to her. She counted only its effect—under it Gar became the charming lover he had been in Bridgewater.

He had gone with her to buy the new dress; after all, that was the way it should be. "Do you like it?" Kitty would ask, anxiously, each time she appeared from the fitting room to meet his inspection. Gar was prompt to praise or disapprove, speaking always in a masterful way that gave Kitty a little glow of pride. Finally his choice fixed on a corn-yellow gown of exquisitely soft chiffon.

But it was $80. Kitty had gasped at the price.
Gar, it could buy two dresses for that.

"Stuff! You can have all the dresses you want! Take it. Let's get out and go somewhere for lunch."

She had worn the new dress that night to a dinner at the Country Club.

PETER PAN TO WED

The rumor that Betty Bronson (above), Sir James Barrie's selection for the role of "Peter Pan," is soon to marry, has been confirmed by the lucky man. He is Ludwig Lauerhaus of Asheville, N. C. The wedding will take place in Hollywood.

club. She had felt gayer in it. Tubby had told her that she looked like a million dollars. Marge had admitted it.

"You made a hit tonight, Kit.
That's what clothes can do," Gar had told her afterwards.
When Gar insisted she consented to a lesson in golf. She was not much inspired by it and she knew she was stupid in it, sensing what the instructor wanted her to do, but it was pleasing. Gar—Gar had not gone yet with Red to see the man about the new agency. For one reason or another their going was delayed from day to day. He always had ready plausible excuses. Red was busy one day, the man was out of town, another.

Frequently she sent Gar off with out her, usually to play golf. "I've ever so much I want to do. I won't know you're away," she'd assure him. And she'd busy herself quite contentedly. With Pound's help she rearranged Gar's room more to her liking. Pound talked about the country while he worked.

She wrote long letters home, happy letters. She wrote to Sally Withers, telling her of the new dress that had cost $80. She did not tell Sally she had paid for it out of her own money.

She had lost much of her feeling of timidity in the house, before Gar's mother, even with Carol. She laughed a little, thinking how, except for David, she might have stayed on the edge of the household.

One day, passing the half open door of Mrs. Frew's sanctum and hearing Gar's voice from within,
she ventured quite boldly across the threshold.

"Kitty?" There was a hint of inquiry in Mrs. Frew's tone. It might have been Pound intruding and his mistress asking: "What is it, Pounce?" But Kitty managed a smile. "May I stay?" Unbidden, she sat down on the arm of the chair in which Gar was sprawled.

She felt a little shaky at her daring and instinctively she leaned close to Gar's shoulder. He did not notice the curious kindling of Mrs. Frew's eyes as they went swiftly from her to Gar.

The severe simplicity of the room surprised Kitty. He held her attention.
It could serve an ecclesiast for his meditations.

"I think it's very splendid of them to have asked you, Gar," Kitty's attention came back to Mrs.
Frew and what she was saying.
She turned eagerly to Gar.

Gar explained, with much self-satisfaction.
"The idyllers are getting up a company of players. Kit—find a barn somewhere and turn it into a little theater. It's Marge's idea and she wants me to help her run the thing. There'll be a lot of detail work to get it started and I'll need some one who can give the time to it."

"And money, of course," Mrs.
Frew put in before Kitty could say anything. "Let me give something."
"Oh, Marge's going to take care of that end of it. But it's mighty nice in you, mother, to start the subscriptions." He took the check his mother had signed.

"We're going to try some revivals —they're the thing, now. Lots of laughs in them. Marge has dug up a professional who'll coach us.
Paul Somerset. He's been writing on a play—guess he's good, all right. Been in Shakespeare and stuff like that."

Kitty's first excitement was giving way to dismay. If Gar went into this venture—what of his job?

Give Remedy a Chance To Clear Skin Blemishes Authority Urges

BY JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

No matter how good the preparation used for clearing the skin of blemishes, it won't be effective unless one pays attention to a few details which will be outlined here.

A letter which reached me this morning recalls an experience of some time ago.
A girl who happened to be in the same office building as myself came in one morning to have me look at her skin. I was out at the time but an assistant examined her skin and suggested the use of an ointment which had proven helpful in clearing up similar conditions.

Several weeks later the young lady cornered me in the hall and explained what had happened and that the state of her skin showed no improvement. I examined the blemished area and found a small patch of purplish, dry, under-the-skin lumps, further marked by a brownish tinged scaling. This description sounds far more obvious than it actually was at a casual glance. One patch was on her cheek and another across her forehead.

She wore her hair fluffed out at the sides and down on her forehead to cover up the disfigurement of the blemishes and therein lay the secret to the unsuccessful use of the ointment which had been prescribed.

Dispense With Make-Up
She cleansed her skin, applied the ointment and let it remain on overnight. In the morning she removed the ointment, applied her make-up in the usual way, pulled her hair down on her forehead and out on her cheeks.

One glance at her coiffure and the use of make-up and I knew what the trouble was. From then on she kept her hair away from the blemished area and dispensed with the use of make-up, so that within two weeks the condition had cleared up entirely.

Even though the trouble was only a surface skin blemish it hid germs when it came in contact with her face, held them, and put them back again on the skin as soon as the hair was pulled over the blemished area. In this way the value of the ointment during the night was counteracted the next morning and so she was fighting a vicious and endless chain that held no hope of escape.

By keeping the hair off the blemished area and dispensing with rouge and powder the skin was kept clean and soon recovered.
If your skin is inclined to be shiny, calomel powder may be liberally patted over the blemished area and your usual powder applied to other parts of the face.

Their Care.

LILLIAN indeed had made a success of the endeavor which she calls "preening the Dickybird's feathers." I told myself, as my glance at Dicky showed nothing in his eyes or facial expression except courteous concern for Lee Chow.

WRONG DOOR

Though educated at West Point, General Keng Wang of the Chinese army can not remember addresses. In attempting to visit an American army officer friend at Shanghai Gen.
Keng Wang wandered into the Japanese consulate. He was chased by Japanese marines and captured in the lobby of the Astor House. This photo shows General Keng Wang at the time of his graduation from West Point in 1918.

cottage, with 11 people to eat meals and stir up dust."

"And there are 11 people to do the work," she said, with a decided little creak of her teeth as the period of her sentence. "These duffers are going to have an entirely new experience in their young lives.
They're going to have to work for their cuts and flops, and I don't mean maybe."

I have had occasion to admire the efficiency of the Underwoods before, but never more so than in this sudden emergency, doubly difficult of handling to us because the house was so full of guests. Within 12 hours Harry and Lillian had taken at reasonable rental a vacant farnished cottage near the shore, and had moved into it, taking with them every suit at the farmhouse below adult age.

Mary, Marion, their three guests
—Carolyn and Ronald Bixton and Bob Trevelian, Mary's young brothers, Hank and Bill, and even our small boys, Junior and Roderick, all were packed into the big Underwood car and the machines which Ronald and Bob had brought from camp, and were whisked away before I had time to realize what Lillian was planning.

Her apparent ferocity was so incongruous with what I knew of her invariable indulgence of our young people that I forgot my worries in laughing at her.

"I can't imagine you as a Simon Legree flourishing his high over shrinking backs," I said.
"Can't you?" she retorted. "You little know your Lillian. If a knock comes at the back door some night, and a tittering, emaciated creature begs you for sanctuary, you will know that my slave camp is in successful operation."

She flicked me lightly on the cheek and, turning, ran down the path as lightly as her daughter could have done. As I stood gasping after her Katherine, hurrying through the hall, passed beside me.

Have you anything on your mind for the next hour?" she queried.
"Not a thing." I returned promptly, reluctantly bringing my eyes back from the road down which the cars were speeding. "I am at your service."

Then I wish you'd do sentry-go in the sick-room for a half hour or so. I have at least a million things to do and Hugh's alone there with the two sick men."

KIDNAPERS CLAIM MANY VICTIMS

Lindbergh Case Recalls Others in U. S. Annals

Madamed even by the underworld, the kidnaper, properly termed the "lowest criminal," has sought his victims in all spheres of life. Many of the principals of America's all too frequent cases of child abduction have been stolen from humble homes. Such were Billy Gaffney, 5, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who disappeared in 1927, and Grace Budd, of New York, 11, when she vanished a year later. No trace of either has yet been found. The mystery of the disappearance of Jimmy Glass, 4-year-old Jersey City, N. J., youngster in 1915, has never been solved, although a skeleton identified as his was discovered in Pennsylvania eight years later. Baby Lloyd Keet, stolen for ransom from his wealthy parents in Springfield, Mo., was murdered by his abductors while his father was enroute to pay the money they demanded. America's most noted case was the Charlie Ross kidnapping in 1874. The youngster was stolen from his home in Germantown, Pa., and no trace of him was ever found. An abduction with a happier ending was that of 15-year-old Edward A. Cudahy, heir to the pucking fortune. He was returned to his home in Omaha after a ransom of $25,000 had been paid. Pat Crowe, ex-convict, was arrested for the crime, but acquitted. He later admitted his guilt.

By International News Service

NEW YORK For sheer audacity there is nothing in the long history of kidnapping that parallels the Lindbergh abduction. To find a case that even approaches it one must go back almost 60 years. It was a sunny July day in 1874 that another little boy, named Charlie Ross, was stolen from his home in Germantown, Pa. Charlie and his brother, Walter, were playing in front of their house when two men in a wagon called them if they would like some candy and firecrackers. The boys nodded eagerly and were taken by the strangers to a nearby store where Walter was given a quarter, and told to buy what he wanted.

Mystery Never Solved When Walter came out the strangers were gone. They had taken Charlie with them. He was never seen again, although a search as extensive as the one for the Lindbergh baby was instituted and prosecuted.

The frantic father of the boy devoted his life and fortune to the search for his chubby-checked youngster. There were hundreds of clues. None of them led anywhere, although six months after four-year-old Charlie Ross vanished like one whom the earth had swallowed a dying man whispered the best, yet most baffling, clue discovered during the long search.

Spoke Too Late The man was Joseph Douglas, who had been shot while attempting a robbery in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, with William Mosher, a notorious criminal. "He can tell you where you can find the missing Charlie Ross," murmured Douglas, indicating his pal who lay, also wounded, a few feet away.

But Mosher died, taking his terrible secret with him, before they could question him. Douglas also died before any more information could be got from him. Every corner of the United States was searched and the investigators even traveled overseas, but not a trace of sunny faced little Charlie Ross ever rewarded them.

From time to time, men have appeared and declared they were the vanished youngster, now grown up. But none could substantiate his claims to surviving members of the Germantown family.

Cudahy Paid $25,000 A case that attracted international attention was the kidnapping of Edward A. Cudahy, fifteen-year-old heir to a $400,000 packer's fortune. The boy was abducted from his Omaha, Neb., home in 1909 and returned to his parents after $25,000 ransom had been paid. Pat Crowe, ex-convict, was arrested and acquitted, although he later admitted his guilt.

The mystery of the disappearance in 1915 of four-year-old Jimmy Glass of Jersey City has never been solved, although a skeleton identified as his was found in Pennsylvania eight years later. Another baby victim of kidnappers was fourteen-month-old Lloyd Keet, who was stolen from his wealthy parents in Springfield, Mo., in 1917. The child's body was found in a well. Six men and a woman were convicted of the crime and are now serving thirty-five year sentences.

Comparatively recent mysteries are the disappearance of Grace Budd and Billy Gaffney, children of humble New York families. Little Billy was 5 when he vanished in 1927 and Grace, 11, when she walked off with an unknown man a year later. Police hold both kidnappings as unfinished cases but little hope is held by the families for the return of their loved ones.

Little wonder that many legislators advocate making kidnapping a capital crime.
